Prompt Aid by Tinley Man Saves Life of Gas Victim

Henry Koehler, who drives a bakery truck for the Tinley Park Bakery thru his quick thinking and prompt application of artificial respiration, saved the life of Louis Dolezal of the McIntosh subdivision last Friday when the latter was overcome by carbon monoxide gas poisoning in the garage at the rear of his home south of New Lenox.

Dolezal went to the garage to take his automobile out about 5:30 o'clock and when he failed to drive out in 15 minutes his wife became alarmed and went to the garage to investigate and found her husband unconscious at the wheel of the car. Neighbors were called and the stricken man was taken into the house and laid on the bed. Hot water bottles were applied to his feet and some of those who had come to help began to rub the stricken man, but there was no sign of the man reviving.

About this time Mr. Koehler of Tinley Park drove up to deliver bakery goods at the Simon home across the street from the Dolezal home and Mrs. Simon told him what had happened and asked Mr. Koehler to go over and see what he could do. Mr. Koehler immediately applied artificial respiration and told the family call the pulmotor squad from Joliet and also to call a doctor. Mr. Koehler worked over Dolezal for over 20 minutes and had started the man breathing again before the pulmotor squad and the doctor arrived and both credited Mr. Koehler with having saved Dolezal's life.

The inhalator crew of the Western United Gas and Electric Co., of Joliet and Dr. L. S. Pederson of Manhattan revived the gas victim after a few hours work. Mr. Dolezal is recovering nicely.

RATE OF POSTAGE ON PRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS INCLOSED IN UNSEALED ENVELOPES.

There appears to be some confusion on the part of the public as well as some postmasters with respect to the rate of postage on Christmas and other greeting cards sent under cover of UNSEALED envelopes.

Printed greeting cards mailed under cover of UNSEALED envelopes are chargeable with postage at the third class rate of 1 1/2 cents for each 2 ounces or fraction of 2 oz., regardless of whether addressed for delivery thru post office boxes or general delivery, or by city or rural carrier; the 1-cent drop-letter rate applicable at nonletter carrier offices does not apply to such cards in unsealed envelopes.

Printed Christmas and other greeting cards in UNSEALED envelopes may bear a simple written inscription not in the nature of personal correspondence, such as "Sincerely yours," "Merry Christmas," "Happy New Year," "With best wishes," etc., together with the name and address of the sender and of the addressee, without subjecting them to more than the third-class rate.

Greeting cards, sealed or unsealed, bearing written messages other than the simple inscriptions above mentioned, as well as all cards sent in sealed envelopes, are chargeable with postage at the first-class rate of 3 cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce, except when the 1-cent drop-letter rate applies.

TINLEY LIONS SPONSOR BOYS SCHOOL PATROL

Continually alert in their efforts of promoting civic deeds for the benefit and welfare of their community, the Tinley Park Lions Club decided to sponsor a Boys' School Patrol.

The matter was taken up and discussed at one of their recent meetings as a result President H. W. Wyman appointed a committee composed of Lions Fred Goebel, chairman, Edward Snyder and Robert L. Rooker to go into the matter and devise ways and means to put it into effect at once.

As a result this committee with the assistance of the Chicago Motor Club and the hearty and whole hearted co-operation of the Tinley Park Board of Education and the principal of the school, Mrs. Helen Sandidge the patrol was organized with the following boys reporting for duty Monday morning: John Evans, captain, Irving Johnson, Orville Olson, Franklin Lehman and Harry Johnson.

These boys wearing the official insignia of their organization will for the present direct children at the following points at certain times before and after school hours: one each on Oak Park avenue at 172nd street and 173rd street; one at the Rock Island railroad crossing at Harper's and two on Oak Park Ave., one on the north and one on the south side of the Rock Island crossing.

The boys were appointed by Mrs. Helen Sandidge, the school principal who will no doubt allow them certain credits based on the quality of service rendered.

The entire community should feel proud of these boys and stand back of them by showing their appreciation of the work they are performing in directing school children at dangerous street and railroad crossings thereby protecting the safety and lives of these children, many of them yet being of tender age and need this protection and the Lions Club of Tinley Park have again demonstrated their civic pride as a service organization in promoting and bringing to a successful conclusion this worthy undertaking.

LITTLE STORY FOR BEDTIME

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JOHNNY CHUCK HAS SOMETHING ON HIS MIND

JOHNNY CHUCK sat on his door step down in the far corner of the Old Orchard trying to make up his mind. Yes, sir, that is just what Johnny Chuck was trying to do and he was making hard work of it. You know how it sometimes is when you are a little undecided. First you think you will, then you think you won't, and finally you begin asking everybody around you for their opinions and wind up by being no better off than you were in the beginning.

The matter on Johnny Chuck's mind was whether he was fat enough to sleep comfortably all winter. That seems like a funny thing to have worrying one, doesn't it? But it wasn't funny to Johnny Chuck. No, indeed, it wasn't funny at all. It really was very serious. He knew that a great deal depended on the amount of fat stored away under his skin before he said good-by to everybody and went to bed deep in the ground to sleep until spring. If he were fat enough it wouldn't make much difference to him how cold the winter might be or how late sweet Mistress Spring might be in coming to wake him up. But if he didn't have fat enough tucked away under his skin he might not be warm enough, and if Mistress Spring should happen to be very late he would be so weak when he awoke that he might not have strength enough even to crawl out of his house. Or it might happen that hunger would awaken him before Mistress Spring arrived and then he might freeze to death trying to find something fit to put in a Woodchuck's stomach.

"I Wish I Could Know If the Winter Is Going to Be Hard and Long," Said Johnny.

So you see the matter was really

Black and White

This Worth creation is an afternoon gown in black and white printed chiffon. The sleeve has an elbow puff, a long tight cuff and a delicate open work of black passementerie set into the armhole.

very important to Johnny Chuck. The fat under his skin was both a blanket and food. That seems queer, but it is true. The fatter he was the warmer he would keep and the more comfortable he would be. In this way the fat was like a blanket. While he slept through the long, cold months of course he would eat nothing. In the first place he wouldn't be awake to eat, and you know people do not eat while they are asleep. In the second place there would be nothing to eat, anyway. So wise Old Mother Nature has provided that the fat Johnny Chuck lays up shall take the place of food.

You know how it is with food. We take it into our stomachs and from there it is taken into our bodies to build them up and to make the heat which keeps us warm. In Johnny Chuck's case Old Mother Nature has fixed things so that the body can get what it needs from the fat with which it is covered. It needs only a very little at a time during the winter, because you know Johnny is asleep; curled up quite motionless. A great deal of the food we eat is used up in what is called energy, which is the power of moving about and doing things. You know how it is when you are sick and cannot eat. In a little while you have no strength to move. You are very weak. But if you did not have to move at all you could live a long time with very little food, because none of it would be used for energy. It is the same way with Johnny Chuck. Sleeping and lying perfectly still, he needs no food for energy, and so his body gets all it needs by absorbing it from the fat. Absorbing means taking in the way a sponge soaks up water.

So you see it was quite as important to Johnny Chuck that he should be fat enough as it was to Striped Chipmunk that he should have his storehouse filled before the coming of Rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost. It was this that Johnny had on his mind as he sat on his door step, that bright, cool autumn afternoon. There was still plenty of food. He could eat more if he really needed it. To be sure he was tired of eating. For a long time he had been eating, not because he was hungry, but to store food away in the form of fat. His neighbors didn't understand this. They watched him eat and grow fatter and they called him piggyish. Of course, this was very unfair.

"I wish I could know if the winter is going to be hard and long," said Johnny as he waddled over to a patch of clover. He was already so fat that he was roly-poly and waddled when he walked. "I'm sleepy enough to go to bed right now, but I want to be sure that I am fat enough."

Greatness

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I LOOKED for greatness in a tree, And found one very tall to see, For rich the soil and warm the sun, And much it had of either one. And then, amid the sterile ground, A cleft within a rock I found That little soil or summer knows, Yet in that cleft there grew a rose.

I looked for greatness in a man, And found one who with gold began, And all the nation knew his name, Paid tribute to his purchased fame. And then, amid the huts and streets, I found a man who met defeats, Yet made a little, millions less, And did not think it was success.

I looked for greatness in a soul And found a singing oriole Upon the stage, whom crowds applaud.

Yet whisper when she walks abroad, Then, by a little thoroughfare, I found a spotless mother there Whose songs, remembered by a son, Had brought him to that Other One.

RED INDIAN HELD MASTER OF CHASE

As Hunters, Race Has Never Been Surpassed.

Generally speaking, the principal occupation of the men of any American Indian tribe was that of hunting, and among no other people up on the whole face of the globe was the technique of the chase developed so highly.

The typical Indian hunter never has been surpassed with respect to ability to track and take game, and in the term hunting we may include fishing also, writes James Waldo Fawcett in the Washington Post.

It is supposed that the Indian found the western world plentifully stocked with buffalo, deer, bear, fox, wolf, rabbit, llama and guanaco, when he first entered the scene. But though there had been a variety of horses in South America at least before the appearance of the Indian, there were no horses at the moment of his coming; and it is to be noted that the Indian remained a pedestrian hunter until the period after the arrival of the Spaniards, when he caught and tamed the steeds which had escaped from them—a date not earlier than the end of the first quarter of the sixteenth century.

However, the Indian either had the domesticated dog with him when he crossed from Asia or he quickly accomplished the domestication of the wolf he found here. At a very early point in his career, in any case, he hunted with dogs, though no special breed was developed for the purpose.

The Indians' weapons were the spear, the bow and arrow, and the club, all of which he probably brought from Asia and the harpoon which he likely invented much later as a natural outgrowth from the spear and the arrow. The throwing stick also was used by the Pueblos in the Southwest and the Eskimos in the North, and the blowgun was familiar to the inhabitants of the Gulf coast and the Atlantic slope regions. Fences of bush, corrals and pitfalls were built, and natural features of the landscape were commonly used—narrow canyons in the Southwest, for example—for collecting and isolating game. Traps and snares of great simplicity, but amazingly effective, were widely set and carefully watched, and nets were sometimes made and used by entire communities.

The Indian was a constructive communist in many respects, particularly in relation to the pursuit of large game. He rarely set out alone to hunt buffalo. On the contrary, his custom was to go only with a numerous company of his friends, and a buffalo hunt, especially after the arrival of horses, was a great social event, characterized by ceremonial rites and songs, fetiches and taboos.

But smaller animals were hunted by the Indian alone—a single free lance moving through the forest with the maximum of caution, more quietly than the objects of his search themselves. As the game declined in numbers his skill increased, until at the last he had developed an acuteness of technique without parallel in recorded history.

FROM THE BEGINNING

From his fur post, Sunset House, in the Canadian north, Jim Stuart, trader in charge, with his headman, Omar, rescues a girl from an overturned canoe in the lake. She is Aureole LeBlond, daughter of Stuart's rival in the fur business, and proves to be a charming companion. In a spirit of fun, she and Jim arrange to exchange notes on a certain island. LeBlond, with Paradis, his half-breed lieutenant, arrives in search of the missing girl. Paradis displays enmity toward Jim, though LeBlond acknowledges his debt of gratitude. Going to the island to see if Aureole has left the promised note, Jim is ambushed by Paradis and forced to travel toward the LeBlond post. On the way he overthrusts the boat, leaving his half-breed enemy on the beach. Jim discusses plans with his superior, Andrew Christie. Displeased at the trade showing made Christie allows Stuart, at his request, one year to "make good." He leaves the post feeling he has been unjustly treated. Paradis bribes an Indian to ambush Jim and Omar. The attempt fails, and Jim takes the Indian to LeBlond.

Paradis opened the door of the trade-room, his dark features picturing the strain under which he labored, but he evidenced no surprise at the presence of the men from Sunset House. He met the glittering eyes of the Ojibwa, Jim's amused smile, and the savage glance of Omar, who stood, arms folded, the fingers of his right hand touching the handle of his knife, with equal indifference.

"Good day, Monsieur Paradis," said Jim. "Pierre, here, has a little story to tell your employers." Turning to the excited Indian, Stuart continued: "Now tell these gentlemen just what you told us."

"What have I to do with the Indian?" demanded Paradis, assuming an air of surprise, as he stroked his small mustache. But Jim noted the unsteadiness of his hand.

"Keep quiet!" rasped the interested and perplexed MacLauren. "Let him tell his story."

Questioned by Jim when he faltered, his eyes shifting fearfully from the black face of LeBlond to the sneering Paradis, Pierre told, now in English, now in Ojibwa, how he had been refused supplies for the winter because of his old debt, and in despair was about to leave with his family when Paradis approached him with the scheme to ambush Stuart's canoe on its return up the Womani river from Lake Expanse.

As Migwan accused Paradis of plotting the shooting of Omar and Jim, the sneer faded from the head man's face. With a snarl he flung at the Indian: "You lie! You dirt eater!"

"One minute, Paradis!" rasped Jim. "Let him finish!"

LeBlond was studying his assistant through narrowed eyes.

"Right here, I want to say," said Jim, "that it was only after a long grilling, when he feared for his life, that this man named you, Paradis."

"When you put eet een hees head, eh?" sneered the other, palpably uneasy under the searching scrutiny of Louis LeBlond.

"No, I didn't put it into his head—I didn't have to," drawled Jim, enjoying the baiting. "After giving you that swimming lesson, I just naturally thought you were the skunk behind this shooting."

Paradis denied having any part in the ambush. "Eet ees a lie—all lie!" he protested. "I refuse dis Pierre flour an' he mak' up de story."

"But why should he take it out on me and my man here unless he was paid to do it? He had nothing against us! He never saw us before," demanded Jim. "And how did he know we were at Lake Expanse. You told him and you learned it from MacLauren."

"He went to rob you of your grub!" "Nonsense!" He knew we weren't freighting supplies—our canoe was empty." Then Jim turned to grave-faced LeBlond and MacLauren who were exchanging whispers. "If I report this thing to Christie at Lake Expanse, there'll be a police canoe here in September. You know what that means?"

LeBlond nodded. "We don't want the police in this, Mr. Stuart," he said quietly. "It's a bad mess, but you've only got this Indian's word against the word of Paradis. If you report this thing to the authorities, it will make no end of trouble. They'll have all of us down to the railroad and hold us there as witnesses."

"It certainly will be serious not only for Paradis but for the North-West Trading company," agreed Jim with a stiff smile, while wrinkles of amused satisfaction furrowed Omar's square face as he watched the apprehension in the eyes of LeBlond. "But I don't intend to have Indians bribed to fire on me by your people," he went on. "If he'd hit one of us, it would have put you out of business and you'd stand trial to boot."

"You don't believe I had any knowledge of this?" protested LeBlond.

"No, of course not."

"What d'you want us to do, Stuart?" asked MacLauren. "We regret this thing deeply. But there's only this Indian's word against that of Paradis."

"Paradis had a motive for injuring me; this Indian had none. I'm satisfied the story is straight. Now if you'll get rid of Paradis—send him out of this country and keep him out, I won't report this shooting."

"That's a bargain," quickly agreed MacLauren.

The ash-gray face of Paradis worked convulsively as he heard his sentence of banishment. Then he found his voice. "You writer of love letters," he stormed. "You tink you get her now Paul Paradis ees gone, eh? Ha! ha! You are de beeg fool—de beeg—"

From the side, unnoticed by his head man, the exasperated LeBlond struck Paradis full in the face with his open hand—then the trade-room door swung open wide and Aureole LeBlond stood in the doorway.

"Why, what's happening? What's the matter?" Eyes wide with surprise, the girl glanced from the dazed Paradis and the furious face of LeBlond to the men from Sunset House.

"Mr. Stuart!" she gasped, her dark skin deepening with color. "You—came here, and they didn't tell me. Father, what has happened?"

Black brows contracted, she glanced inquiringly from her father's annoyed look to the enchanted eyes of Stuart. "This is no place for you; we are talking business," objected LeBlond.

As he watched her, Jim wondered if Paradis had kept secret their meeting at the split rock—if she had made a rendezvous in the stolen note, to have him fall her. Then slowly over her expressive face broke the girl's infectious smile.

"It may be none of my business, mon pere, but as Mr. Stuart happened not long ago, to have fished your daughter out of the lake, your wayward child as the female head of your house insists on welcoming Mr. Stuart to Bonne Chance." The room was hushed with tension as she walked to Jim, and gave him her hand.

"Welcome to our city, Mr. Stuart," she said, her dusky eyes alight with challenge. "Of course, after this momentous business, you'll have lunch with us." Then she dropped a low: "Paradis told me about the split rock."

He saw the pulse beating in her throat, the color deepen under her olive skin, while her hand for an instant pressed his. And the touch of her sent his heart off at a gallop.

"Thank you, but we're starting at once," he answered, and, poignant as a knife thrust, came the realization that this amazing girl, to whose nearness every nerve in his body was alive, would soon be but a memory.

"But why?" she demanded. Her candid gaze sought the impatient look of her father. "Why do you stand there as if you had no manners? Have you lost your voice? I am asking Mr. Stuart to lunch with us before he goes."

With a resigned shrug of the shoulders LeBlond answered his indomitable daughter. "You do not understand—"

No Profitable Market for American Seaweed

America's interest in its own seaweed resources dates back to pre-Columbian times, when Indians used it as fish bait and for basket weaving. In 1902 a scientist discovered that seaweed on the Pacific coast contained potash, important fertilizing element. But he could interest no one in his discovery for a decade.

As in the case of many other raw products, a World war was necessary to make its importance known. German potash supplies were cut off. The farms cried for potash, so the government set out to find a source. A company manufacturing explosives also needed a substance from seaweed as an ingredient for its products, so it

Dean of Battleships

H. M. S. Implacable is the oldest battleship afloat, and has a great history. Originally French, she was launched as long ago as 1789 under the name the Duguay Trouin, and after Trafalgar she was rounded up and taken as a prize to Plymouth. The Duguay Trouin would not surrender until 150 men and her captain were killed or wounded. Not for nothing, when the re-christening set in, was the name "Implacable" chosen.

we are talking business—very important. Will you wait for us outside?"

She glanced doubtfully at Stuart and the men standing beside him. "Looks more like war than business, to me," she flung lightly over her shoulder as she left the room.

"It's agreed, then," said LeBlond eagerly, "that you make no report to the authorities if Paradis goes?"

"Yes, if you ship Paradis to your Nipigon posts—out of this country."

"We'll shake hands on that, Mr. Stuart," said MacLauren, and the three men bound their compact. "Now will you take a meal with us before you start?"

"Yes," urged the relieved LeBlond, "my daughter expects you."

An hour with her, even in the presence of her father and his partner would have been unalloyed delight to the captivated Stuart, but the fierce protest in the stormy face of Omar and the responsibility for the safety of Pierre forced him to refuse.

Outside, in the clearing, Aureole was waiting. "You will allow us to make a small return of the hospitality you offered us? You will stay?"

"I'm sorry. I can't."

"You mean you don't care to?" She was walking alone with him now ahead of the others.

"Care to?" He looked boldly into her pleading eyes. "Don't you know that I want to see you—talk to you? Can't you feel it?"

She turned to the lake and he saw she slow pulse of color sweep to the raven hair that rippled from her temple as she asked: "Then I'm something more than an empty-headed, spoiled child to you, Mr. Jeem Stuart?"

Intoxicated by her nearness—he even caught the faint scent of the perfume she wore—Jim's voice thickened as he replied, almost inaudibly: "You're something more than a glorious creature who is going out of my life forever, Aureole LeBlond."

"Mr. Stuart!" She Gasped, Her Dark Skin Deepening With Color. "You Came Here, and They Didn't Tell Me."

Her dusky eyes half closed as he watched her profile, with its quivering lips; but she did not turn her face. "You mean that?"

"I mean much more."

"Then why am I going out of your life? I stay here until September."

"I am going into the bush with Omar."

"When?"

"In two days."

"Then meet me at the white, sand-beach on the large island," she said hurriedly, for voices sounded close behind them, "tomorrow morning as early as you can."

"I will be at the white sand-beach," he whispered, and his heart shook him with its pounding.

"We're sorry you won't allow us to return your hospitality, Mr. Stuart," said LeBlond as they stood on the beach where Omar and Pierre waited at the canoe.

"And we admire your sporting blood in not pushing this matter," added MacLauren, "Innocent or guilty, Paradis is going to pay for this mess."

"He's going to pay me if ever Omar, here, or I run into him again. You keep your agreement and I'll keep mine."

"Thanks, Mr. Stuart," returned Mac-

Lauren, flushing. "I'm glad we've got such a square rival on this lake."

With a wave of his hat to the white figure of Aureole who stood on the higher shore, Stuart stepped into the canoe, while two humiliated and exasperated fur men watched him until his canoe passed from sight behind the islands.

"First blood for Sunset House!" laughed Jim, elated with the outcome of the visit to LeBlond's—and glowing with the memory of Aureole's flaming face. Tomorrow he should see her alone. With her heart in her voice she had asked him to come—this mocking, headstrong girl who had feared to meet his eyes. There was no mistaking her flushed face, her voice, her look, as through a curtain of mist.

He, also, had come to mean something to this amazing girl.

"Well, Omar, what d'you think? Will they keep their word and send our friend Paradis down to Nipigon?"

The paddle of the half-breed dipped methodically a number of times before he answered: "Why you hunt dat girl w'en we start for Pipestone in three day?"

Jim's brown face slowly broke into a smile. There was no deceiving the astute Omar. And his unfailing loyalty atoned for his meddling.

"I asked you if you thought they'd keep their word. Paradis is a valuable man; LeBlond will hate to lose him."

Thrice the long paddle of Omar broke the water while Jim waited for the sternman's answer. Then the slit-like eyes of the half-breed met those of his chief as he replied: "You cross de lak' again, Omar go wid you."

There was no luring of Omar from his fixed idea, so, with a laugh, Jim resumed his paddling.

An anxious Sarah and Marthe stood on the beach beside old Esau and the yelping Smoke and the dog team, when the canoe returned. In the eyes of the Indian women the journey across the lake had been in the nature of a war party, and they chattered with relief when they saw there had been no casualties.

"You cross de lak' een de mornin'?" demanded Omar.

Jim nodded.

"I follow een noder cano'. You tak' Smoke?"

"Yes, I planned to send Smoke into the bush to smell around. I won't be caught again."

Omar shook his black head. "You nevaire see her again. W'y you go?"

The head man stared in awed silence at the sudden pain in Jim's set face.

"That is why I am going; because I'll never see her again," said Stuart, in a low tone.

"Ah-hah, you lak' dat girl," replied the loyal Omar, softly. "Den I go tak' care of you."

The wide mirror of the great lake was still shot with reflected stars when the two canoes left Sunset House. At the knees of each paddler, as he pushed his boat out into the dusk, lay a rifle.

Before the sunrise two canoes were landed widely apart on the large island, drawn up, and hidden from sight in the "bush." Omar took his rifle and the binoculars and crossed the island to watch the post. If Paradis followed her canoe that morning, the half-breed promised himself, LeBlond would be relieved of his promise—unless he wanted to send a dead man to the Nipigon.

Jim had hours to wait until he could hope for the coming of Aureole LeBlond's canoe. So he dropped his clothes on the sand beach and cooled his impatience with a long swim. She was coming to meet him—this glorious dark creature who had so valiantly fought death over miles of wind-driven sea, only to laugh at it.

In her pride, she had turned her flushed face and clouded eyes from him that he might not see; but he had seen. Miracle though it was, those hours at Sunset House with this girl of the cities had wrought their mutual spell. The humble fur-trader, Jim Stuart, had reached her—if not her heart, her senses. And she was coming to him here on this lonely island to say good-by.

Jim landed and leisurely put on his clothes. She had asked him to be at the sand-beach as early as he could reach it, but had named no hour. He looked at his watch. Seven o'clock! Too early yet! It would take her an hour to paddle from the post. Then he saw a canoe in the distance.

When the boat had approached to within a half-mile Jim knew, from the stroke, that the craft was paddled by women. It was she.

Presently the bow paddler waved her hand to the man who restlessly walked the shore. The canoe drifted nearer. For a space, he watched the blade of Aureole, driven by her round arms, flash in the sun; then shortly, her laugh reached him.

"Good morning! You are early, Monsieur Stuart," she called.

"I have been here for hours," he said, "waiting for the dawn, and now, she has come."

"Very pretty!" With a flash of white teeth she smiled into his eager face as he drew the boat in to the beach and gave her his hand, while the eyes of the Indian girl in the stern snapped with excitement at this secret tryst of LeBlond's daughter and the trader from across the lake.

Then, as she stepped to the sand, Jim's eyes, which had not left the radiant dark face, noted the tan linen knickers beneath the white blouse.

"Gibodiagwason!" he grinned. "You wore them in memory?"

Her dusky eyes lit with raillery. "Yes, in memory of our meeting—and because they wash."

They stood on the beach looking at each other like runaway children, as the Indian girl paddled the canoe discreetly up the shore.

And Glory Shone Around by Grace H. Olin

JUST wanted to say Merry Christmas, and thanks for the check, Mr. Breen."

Mr. Joseph Breen paused in signing a letter and smiled back at the freckled grin.

"Merry Christmas to you, Jim," he answered, "and you're most welcome to the check. Are you going out to—er—blow it all in, or perhaps give it to your mother for a holiday present?"

"Neither." The excitement of the moment made the lad forget that an office boy was conversing quite freely with the president of the company.

"Mothers ain't so stuck on checks," he continued, "they like something more personal, something that shows you really thought about 'em."

"So?" the president's eyebrows went up in question.

"And what," he inquired, "did you select that was personal?"

"The swellest scarf"—Jim was warming up enthusiastically—"all blue and gold and fringe on it, long as my hand."

"It must be a beauty," agreed Mr. Breen.

"Yes, but that ain't all, Mr. Breen. My mother said she hoped some folks would sing carols outside our house tonight, 'cause she loved 'em."

"And what do you think? A whole crowd of us are going to sing carols for her. Oh, boy, won't she like that?"

The lad moved towards the door.

"Perhaps you're going to sing carols for your mother tonight, too."

"I—I hadn't thought of it before," confessed Mr. Breen, "but perhaps I will, Jim."

His mother was just like any other mother. How she would like to have carols sung in front of the little white house on the hill.

Mr. Breen reached for his phone. "A train leaving at two, you say? Thank you. I can make it easily."

Outside, his car waited, with Jenkins at the wheel.

"Hello, Jenkins," he greeted.

"I've just got an hour and a half to do some last minute shopping. Then I'll catch the train for home."

"Take a holiday for a week, Jenkins, do you get me?"

"Yes, sir," gasped Jenkins, "I get you."

And up in the white house on the hill little Mrs. Breen put the golden coffee and brown muffins on the snowy table.

"Supper's ready, Joe," she called.

The old man came slowly, a frown on his ruddy face.

"Now, Joe," the woman soothed. "Don't you go and let anything spoil your Christmas spirit."

"I know it, Myra." He patted the wrinkled hand. "But when I saw Seth Holden's boy and Daley's girl come home for the holiday, I just couldn't help feeling a little bitter."

"Our boy hasn't spent a Christmas with us for five years. Why, we haven't even seen him for two."

"I know, Joe, but he never forgets a check, and such a generous one. Remember, Joe, our boy is a busy man."

"Now, Joe," as he started to speak, "I have the most wonderful evening planned. We are too old to believe in Santa Claus, but we are never too old to believe in angels."

"The young folks most likely will come singing carols, and I hope they will sing the one I love best."

"While shepherds watched their flocks by night, All seated on the ground, The Angel of the Lord came down And glory shone around."

And so the carolers, peeking into the windows, saw them sitting hand in hand.

Then suddenly, clear on the evening air, came the sound of many voices, one deep, rich tone, apart from all the others.

"The little old lady's eyes were like stars. 'He's come, Joe,' she whispered, tremulously, 'that's his voice.' Then the door opened, and two strong arms held them fast. 'Glad to see me, dear folks?' cried a beloved voice.

"Son," said the old man, solemnly. "I think the Angel of the Lord must have brought you."

"Of course," exulted little Mrs. Breen. "For just see the glory shining around."

MAKES COAL CHANGES

A process which does in a few hours what nature has taken millions of years to perform is said to have been accomplished by a Chicago engineer, who has succeeded in transforming bituminous coal into anthracite. He is C. S. Lomax and a plant with a daily capacity of 600 tons is in operation. The coal handled by this plant has a volatility of 36 per cent, whereas after carbonization it is 12 per cent.

MAY CLOSE ACCOUNTS WITHOUT FURTHER PAYMENTS ON STOCK

The LaSalle Quincy Corporation (formerly the Utility Securities Company) announced today that each person who purchased from it stock of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois or the Commonwealth Edison Company or The People's Gas Light and Coke Company under the Utility Securities Company partial payment plan will be given an opportunity, after January 1, 1933, to close his account without making any further payments and receive full shares or scrip for fractional shares at his contract price for the full amount paid in.

These accounts average less than two shares for each purchaser. The opportunity to close out these accounts on the above basis will expire April 29, 1933. Those who take advantage of the offer will be relieved of any further obligations under their contracts.

MISLEADING ADVERTISING HAS BEEN REVISED

More than 20,000 false and misleading advertisements were either discontinued entirely or revised to check fairly with the truth last year as a result of the Federal Trade Commission's campaign against fraudulent advertising. It is estimated in the Commission's annual report for 1932 which was transmitted to Congress, Monday, December 12.

While the amount of money saved the public by this branch of the Commission's work runs into large figures, the actual cost of the work for the last fiscal year was only $23,400 or an average of $57.63 a case.

Hundreds of advertisers of fake products have been driven out of business thru co-operation of publishers with the Federal Trade Commission in its campaign against fraudulent advertising, and thousands of otherwise honest business men, who had habitually used exaggeration in their advertising assertions, have revised their "copy" and now find that it pays to tell the truth in advertising.

FOR USEFUL CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Our Christmas tables are loaded with practical, inexpensive gifts. Here are just a few suggestions of the unusual values you'll find:

ELECTRIC CLOCK 4.75

ELECTRIC CASSEROLE 4.95

POTTERY LAMP 2.55

While gift shopping don't forget about your Christmas decorations. Electric candles, window wreaths, lighted stars and tree lighting sets (indoor and outdoor) have never been priced so low at your Public Service Store.

COFFEE-MAKER 7.95

WAFFLE IRON 3.45

The Electric Casserole cooks everything from baked potatoes to pot roast—from vegetables to brown bread. It holds 2 quarts and has both a high-speed and low-speed heating element. Finished in ivory and green porcelain enamel, it is only $4.95.

The Electric Clock is an alarm model made by Hammond. A tiny light inside illuminates the dial during the night. In a trim walnut-finish case, only $4.75.

The Pottery Lamp comes in several styles. Large molded bases are beautifully colored in green, black, pumpkin, oxblood or yellow. Parchment shades are decorated to match. An unusual value at only $2.55.

The Coffee-Maker (by Hotpoint) brews delicious clear coffee without boiling. Glass parts are Pyrex—metal parts are chromeplated. Makes six cups. Only $7.95 cash—or $1 down "little by little"

The Smoking Stand is handsomely finished in wrought iron. Its electric lighter is detachable. Comes complete with colored glass ash tray for only $1.25.

The Waffle Iron has an automatic signal that tells when grids are ready for the batter. It is finished in non-tarnishing chromeplate. A real bargain at $3.45.

The Corn Popper pops corn electrically without muss or fuss. It holds a quart. In chromium, only $1.70.

The Heater plugs in wherever there is an electric outlet. The 13-inch reflector is chromeplated. The base is finished in green enamel. Only $2.95.

The Heat Pad is covered in soft lavender eiderdown. Its switch gives you a choice of three constant temperatures—high, low or medium. Only $3.15.

The Automatic Iron (Hotpoint's newest model) is the same size as ordinary irons but weighs only 3-lbs. Because of its extra heat, it does a faster job and requires no additional pressure. Only $5.95.

The Kitchen Clock helps to keep the kitchen running always on time. It never has to be wound and never runs down because it's electric. The metal case is enameled in blue, green or white. Only $4.75.

The Boudoir Lamp Set gives any dressing table an attractive feminine touch. Colorful china dolls support frilled rayon shades in rose, green or orchid. The complete set, nicely boxed, is only $2.95.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY OF NORTHERN ILLINOIS

About the Public Service Company:

Several outstanding facts about this Company probably are not as well understood as I think they should be. (1) It is purely an operating company and is not owned or controlled by any other company. (2) The majority of its stockholders live right here—it is "home owned". (3) All of its officers and employees live here. (4) Its future is irrevocably dependent upon the growth and prosperity of northern Illinois.

James Simpson
CHAIRMAN

What Is a "Cockle"?

A COLD weather breakfast is one that ought to warm not only your stomach but also the cockles of your heart. We've always been in doubt as to just what part of the heart the "cockle" was, so we looked it up in the dictionary. The one we consulted obligingly informed us that cockle means "the fire-chamber or dome of a hot-air furnace, hence the inner chamber of the heart." We had always thought that the mouth was the hot-air chamber of the body, especially in a presidential election year, but we suppose the dictionary must know. At any rate it's a very gratifying feeling to have that particular portion of your anatomy warmed, and here's the way to do it with a breakfast containing all the fruit, cereal, meat, coffee and other ingredients the heart could desire.

A Better Breakfast
Orange Sections in Iced Grapefruit Juice
Hot Cereal with Raisins
Broiled Calves Liver and Bacon
Popovers Coffee Apple Butter

The delicious fruit dish which begins this breakfast is made by cutting the peel from four oranges and removing the sections with a knife, being careful to discard all white fibre. Then pour over them ice cold grapefruit juice from a No. 2 can which has been kept for a long time in the refrigerator, and add a very little sugar if desired. This serves six to eight people, and the whole breakfast is guaranteed to warm that many cockles, whatever they are.

Monument Honors Heroic Operator Who Gave Up Her Life for Others

Natural boulder with tablet erected by her fellow telephone workers to commemorate the sacrifice of Sally Rooke, who warned others and was herself drowned in the flood of the Dry Cimarron.

There are in this country public memorials erected to honor nineteen men and one woman in their capacities as representatives of public service organizations. Among those so commemorated are such famous names as Robert Fulton, steamboat pioneer; Henry L. Flagler, railroad developer; James J. Hill, railroad "Empire Builder"; Samuel F. B. Morse, telegraph pioneer; Samuel Rea, railroad president; and Cornelius Vanderbilt, railroad builder.

And then there is Sally Rooke.

The Only Woman Thus Honored

Sarah J. Rooke, to give her full name, was not a pioneer in transportation, nor an empire builder, nor a captain of industry. She was a telephone operator.

But she takes her place, and no humble one at that, alongside these well-known figures to whom memorials have been erected in all parts of the country in honor of their accomplishments. She is the only woman thus honored.

At Folsom, New Mexico, on August 27, 1908, a raging flood poured down the Dry Cimarron and carried nineteen people to their death. Though urged to save herself, Sally Rooke stuck to her switchboard and saved the lives of hundreds of persons by warning them to flee. But, she herself went down into the black waters of death.

4,000 Fellow Workers Contributed

The memorial is unique for another reason. It was paid for by individual ten-cent contributions, more than 4,000 telephone men and women from all parts of the country contributing dimes so that they might have a share in honoring this telephone girl who upheld the best traditions of the service.

The monument is a huge boulder found in the "black diamond" granite fields near Salida, Colo. It has been left in its rough, natural state, except for the imbedding of a bronze tablet on the face. This reads:

In honored memory of SARAH J. ROOKE TELEPHONE OPERATOR who perished in the flood waters of the Dry Cimarron at Folsom, N.M. August 27, 1908 while at her switchboard warning others of their danger.

With heroic devotion she glorified her calling by sacrificing her own life that others might live. "Greater love hath no man than this." Erected by her fellow workers.

Relief Drive In Cook County Is Nearing Final Goal

Philip W. Moore, chairman of the suburban division of the Emergency Welfare Fund campaign for $7,500, 000 to be used in private relief work in Cook County, announced decided progress today. At the start of the week, some four of the twenty suburbs now conducting solicitation had turned in subscriptions totalling $34, 852.89. More of the communities are expected to report their returns during the week. Reports from others, where solicitation is just getting under way, will not be received until next week, according to Mr. Moore.

The week opened with total gifts of $3,390,000 on hand from thruout the county, or close to 45 per cent of the fixed quota. It was the expectation that the half-way mark would be reached during the week. Activities in the city were augmented this week with the beginning of the campaign of about 1,000 women to cover all small retail stores that could not be contacted by the main group, operating in the business and industrial organizations.

"There has been a much better understanding of purpose and method in our campaign in the last week," said Mr. Moore, "and for that reason we are expecting much freer giving within the next few days. More and more of the citizens are recognizing the urgency of this appeal for our welfare work and if subscriptions are speeded, we shall be in position to reduce distress by a wide margin in short order.

"It must be understood, however, that the total quota of $7,500,000 is the smallest possible sum that will care for the added burdens of the charities this winter, and for that reason we must reach the goal as quickly as possible so that all phases of welfare work will be assured of full support and be handled efficient

Mohawk Chief Was First Indian to Talk over the Telephone

The first Indian to talk over a telephone was a Mohawk chief. The incident took place at Alexander Graham Bell's summer home in Canada, where he was spending a vacation, soon after his invention of the telephone in Boston. The Indian was Chief Johnson, father of Pauline Johnson, the poetess. The chief spoke in Mohawk, and what he is alleged to have said was: "Sago gatchi; ska no ska?" which means "Good greetings, cousin; how are you?"

Northern Canning Industry to Have Modern Communication

It is not the precious yellow metal washed from the sands of the creeks and rivers which brings to Alaska its chief source of wealth. Far surpassing gold, is the income derived from the silver hordes of salmon that each year make their way to the fresh water streams emptying into the ocean, that provides Alaska's greatest revenue. The salmon canning industry returns approximately $30,000,000 each year, which is more than five times the amount taken out of Alaska annually in gold.

Because of the importance of this industry and the necessity for prompt and reliable communication between the fishing boats and the canneries, and between one canner and another, the Western Electric Company, the manufacturing and supply unit of the Bell System, was requested to make a study of conditions in Alaska and a trial of radio telephony. The results demonstrated the practicability of this means of communication under the unusual conditions prevailing in the salmon-packing industry.

Radio telephone communication was determined upon because the shallowness of the river beds at low tide prevents reliable communication by boat, while the flat, boggy country is unfavorable to land communication. The apparatus used in making the test to prove the adaptability of radio telephony is essentially the same as that recently developed for two-way communication between airplanes and ground stations by scientists and engineers of the Bell Telephone Laboratories. The radio telephone sets for the trial were installed on the shore at Libbyville, on the shore of Bristol Bay, Alaska, and on the David B, a sturdy sixty-foot Diesel-engined craft. Two-way communication at a distance of 130 miles in daylight was held with loud speaker volume at both ends, and no failures occurred during the entire seven weeks in which the trial equipment was in use.

TELEPHONE LINES UNHURT AS STORM DOWNS POLES

When a freak snow storm descended upon central New York this past winter, several telephone poles were blown down on a line west of Syracuse, but not a single break in the service occurred. Upon investigation by telephone plant men, it was found that west of Fairmount six poles were lying across the road, five poles were leaning at different angles, but not a crossarm, a wire, nor an insulator had been broken, and the lines leading to the west were all in good working order.

PROPER TELEPHONE USE NOW STUDIED IN HIGH SCHOOL

In order to fit them better for business positions after the completion of their school work, commercial students of the Muscatine, Ia., High School now receive practical instruction in the proper use of the telephone. This was brought about through the request of a Muscatine business man.

CHRISTMAS SPEED

THIS is the season of the year when Santa Claus harnesses his dashing reindeer to his sleigh in this country, Holland, Germany and England, when St. Nicholas steals softly through the countryside in the south of Europe, when Pere Noel, or Father Christmas, fills little French children's sabots with all sort of delightful surprises, and Kris Kringle in Norway and Knecht Rupert in Germany act as helpers in keeping records and driving the sleigh.

Have you ever thought of how fast that sleigh must travel to cover all the territory it does? Why, Major James H. Doolittle, who was timed in an airplane at an average speed of more than 293 miles an hour in Cleveland last summer, was rightly named if you compare him with Santa Claus. That jolly Saint sets up such a speed record each Christmas Eve that it takes him an entire year to recover from it. And he breaks the record every year because there are constantly more little boys and girls, and grown-up people in the world for him to take presents to.

Fast and Furious

The fun and feasting at Christmas should be fast and furious—and it generally is! Whether you have it at noon or night, just for the family, or for a lot of friends, too, this is the time to bring out your best linen and dishes, to hang up the holly, and hide the mistletoe where maidens will work under it unawares. And this is the time to put your best foot foremost in the dinner that you serve.

In order that you may not put your foot in it instead of putting it foremost, we are suggesting here a Christmas dinner for eight that will make a hit with all. Tear out this story from the newspaper, and, if you don't use the whole dinner, you'll at least find one or two recipes in it to add to the feast that you have planned.

Christmas Dinner Menu

Queen Olives Spiced Crabapples
Hot Tomato Juice
Roast Turkey or Chicken
with Mushroom Stuffing
Mashed Potatoes Giblet Gravy
Artichokes or Brussel Sprouts with Drawn Butter
Cranberry Sauce
Holly Berry Salad
Plum Pudding
or Frozen Christmas Layers
Cordial Drops Coffee Nuts

Hot Tomato Juice: Combine two 15-ounce cans tomato juice, two bouillon cubes, one and one-half cups water, salt and pepper to taste, few drops of Worcestershire sauce and bring to boiling. Serve in cups with a sprinkling of minced parsley.

Mushroom Stuffing: Sauté four tablespoons chopped onion and one 4-ounce can of mushrooms which have been chopped in four tablespoons butter for a few minutes. Add to one and one-half cups of dry bread. Add two teaspoons salt, one-half teaspoon pepper, two teaspoons sage, one teaspoon thyme and moisten with mushroom liquor and as much water as needed. Makes enough to stuff a four to five pound chicken. Double recipe for a large turkey.

Holly Berry Salad: Drain No. 2 can whole or rosebud beets and scoop out centers. Cover with French dressing and let stand several hours in ice box. Meanwhile chop two hard-cooked eggs, season with salt and pepper and moisten with mayonnaise. Drain beets, stuff with egg filling and arrange three or four in a wreath of watercress dipped in French dressing.

Frozen Christmas Layers: Beat one cup cream, add four tablespoons confectioner's sugar and one and one-half squares melted chocolate; flavor with a few drops of vanilla and spread in bottom of refrigerator tray and let freeze while combining part two.

Beat one-half cup cream, add one tablespoon confectioner's sugar and one-half 8-ounce can green gage plums and plum syrup pressed through a sieve. Flavor with a few drops of almond and tint with green coloring. Spread on top of chocolate layer. Let freeze while making part three.

Beat one-half cup cream, add one and one-half tablespoons confectioner's sugar and one-half 8-ounce can raspberries pressed through a sieve. Color red and spread on top of green layer. Let freeze. Turn out in brick form and serve in slices.

THE AFRICAN GLACIER
COUNTRY SIGHTS

Prehistoric African forests in which Scotch heather grows 50 feet high and the only living things to be seen are bright blue worms a foot long are just a few of the strange sights which Carveth Wells, well-known explorer, will describe in the second of his "Mountains of the Moon" broadcasts sponsored by Continental Oil Co., Wednesday night Dec. 21, over N. B. C.

At the close of last week's program, the preliminaries had been completed and Wells and his band of native porters were ready to ascend Africa's most important range, the Ruwenzori or Mountains of the Moon. In the coming broadcast he will tell his radio audience about equatorial glaciers and snowstorms, native superstitions, vegetation dating back to the dinosaurs, an animal that looks like a rabbit but is descended from an elephant and other freaks he encountered.

The Conoco program may be heard by local listeners who tune in on station WMAQ Wednesday night at 9:30 o'clock.

Something Every Car-owner
Should Know.

Your Motor Makes
3,000 to 5,000
Revolutions Before
Oil Circulates
to all moving parts!

WHEN you start your car in the morning, your oil is in the crankcase. Your oil pump immediately starts pumping the oil.

But it takes several minutes, at the least, for even the quickest-circulating oils to reach all parts of the motor. During that time, your motor turns over 3,000 to 5,000 times!

What happens to the unprotected parts of your motor during that time? Engineers say that your motor undergoes, during that period, half of all the wear it suffers!

Only one oil can give you full protection during the starting period. Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil! It is the only mineral oil that penetrates and combines with metal surfaces. Other oils drain back into the crankcase during idle periods, leaving parts dry.

A "Hidden Quart" of Germ Processed Oil stays up in your motor and never drains away!

The "Hidden Quart" is always on duty, protecting every part from the second you touch the starter. It protects you from costly starting wear and gives your car longer life.

Like most good oils, Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil is thoroughly dewaxed and circulates freely at subzero.

Between the Lines

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Hiram L. Williamson,
Illinois Press Association, Editor

Hon. Henry Horner, governor-elect, has been in Springfield several days in conference with Gov. Louis L. Emmerson pertaining to the budget for the coming biennium. Governor Emmerson has inaugurated a plan of economy that will save large sums of money for the taxpayers, and Governor-elect Horner was very much pleased to be invited to Springfield by Governor Emmerson for this conference, as they are both interested in the economy program. While in Springfield, Judge Horner also consulted with a number of political friends.

Gov. Louis L. Emmerson has signed Senator James J. Barbour's bill requiring a city council, upon request of a board of education, to order issued warrants in anticipation of taxes levied for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on bonds to the extent of 75 per cent of the total amount of taxes levied for the purpose. With an emergency clause, the bill went into effect immediately. It was passed at the request of Chicagoans.

For unemployment relief activities, during the next seven months, beginning with December, a total of $45,000,000 will be required, according to estimates furnished the legislature at its last session by the Illinois emergency relief commission. This amount is exclusive of funds obtained through charity drives, local general property taxes for relief, and the portions of the counties' allotment from the motor fuel tax funds that will be used for relief purposes.

The state department of public works and buildings has announced its approval of a contract for a bridge superstructure, to cost $64,316.60, at Marseilles.

The state tax commission, of which Omer N. Custer, Galesburg, is chairman, is expected to certify its totals to Governor Emmerson in a short time. After the valuations are received, members of the state tax levy board will begin to consider the tax rate for the coming year. The present rate is 39 cents on the hundred-dollar valuation. Prospect of a decided increase was eliminated when approval to the $20,000,000 relief bond issue was given at the general election.

An exceptionally light docket confronts the Illinois Supreme court for the December term. The records show a falling off in the number of cases, and the advisement docket, consisting of 91 cases, is the smallest in recent years.

This year every county in the state has students enrolled in the University of Illinois. Cook county leads with 2,712 students. Eleven counties have more than 100 representatives.

Tax anticipation warrants in the amount of $250,000 have been authorized by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson on the request of the University of Illinois to meet current expenses of that institution. The total of tax anticipation notes outstanding is now $8,710,000, which has been borrowed from the gasoline tax fund to meet obligations. During the month of November, $1,025,000 in tax anticipation notes were paid off.

The Central States Forestry congress, meeting in Louisville, Ky., recently selected W. F. Lodge, Monticello, as president of the organization and Lewis B. Springer of the office of the state superintendent of forestry as secretary-treasurer. Dr. Theodore H. Frison, chief of the state natural history survey, Urbana, was named chairman of the program committee for the 1933 convention of the organization to be held in Chicago next September.

The Central Illinois Power Service company has suspended freight service on its electric line from Harrisburg to Eldorado and Carrier Mills. Passenger service on this line was discontinued some time ago.

Whether Illinois has approved a change in its constitution which would allow the submission of three constitutional amendments at each general election will not become definitely known until the official canvass of votes cast. Present estimates indicate its passage is unlikely. Official returns cannot be canvassed by the state canvassing board until Cook county's returns come in, generally a number of weeks after the election. All the votes will then be canvassed by Secretary of State William J. Stratton, Treasurer Edward J. Barrett, Auditor Oscar Nelson and Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom in the presence of Gov. Louis L. Emmerson.

Flags Never Lowered

The flag which flies from a staff over the central pediment and in front of the dome of the National Capitol on the east front, and a similar flag on the corresponding side of the dome on the west front, are never lowered, night or day, except for replacement. Other official flags, by regulation, are lowered at sunset and run up to the peak of the staff at sunrise. That these flags should fly continuously is a matter of custom which has been followed for many years until now it has the authority of tradition.

Illinois' Fifty-seventh general assembly has concluded its poor relief session and unless some emergency arises, there will be no further meeting of the legislature until the Fifty-eighth assembly is installed January 5. In the final sessions, the county optional sales tax bill was passed together with the Meents bill for downstate aid, giving counties the right to issue bonds for six times the amount they receive from the state gas fund, and the Igou $17,000,000 Cook county nonreferendum bond issue measure.

Eward L. Ryerson, Jr., chairman of the Illinois emergency relief commission, expects to make application to the Reconstruction Finance corporation for another unemployment relief loan. The legislative program, passed by the Illinois house and senate, is not expected to provide funds in time for state relief work during December.

Illinois state institutions served 54,511,850 meals at an average cost of 5.69 cents during the last fiscal year—a reduction of more than 15 per cent below the cost for the year that ended June 30, 1931, according to a report issued by the state department of public welfare.

Many persons of prominence appeared on the program for the Illinois conference on social welfare, held at Champaign and Urbana, November 28 to December 1.

The veterans who fought with Grant and Logan and now reside in the Soldiers' and Sailors' home at Quincy have an average age of 87.9 years. Rodney H. Brandon, director of the state department of public welfare, obtained this information from the institution records.

Reports from representatives of the division of animal industry in the Illinois department of agriculture for October reveal that the number of animals that have been tested for bovine tuberculosis in the state has reached the 2,000,000 mark. The state tests have reduced the degree of prevalence of this disease to less than 1 per cent over the state as a whole.

The high standard of training given students of vocational agriculture in the high schools of Illinois has been demonstrated conclusively by the fact that the national championship in judging meat has been awarded students from this state for four consecutive years. In behalf of Illinois, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson has sent his congratulations to the four Dixon high school boys who were winners in the contest at the recent Royal Stock show at Kansas City.

The federal power commission has authorized a license to the state of Illinois to construct a power project including plants at the Brandon Road dam near Joliet, Dresden Island dam and the Starved Rock dam on the Illinois river. The three plants will have a total installed capacity of 90,000 horsepower.

Organized labor leaders are preparing to launch a new drive for passage of a prevailing rate of wage law at the regular session of the legislature which convenes in January, according to R. G. Soderstrom, president of the State Federation of Labor. The Illinois law on this subject, passed recently, was declared invalid by the State Supreme court principally because of a provision creating an appeal board. This clause will be eliminated in the new bill.

Kills Two St. Louis Robbers

St. Louis, Mo.—Two robbers were shot and killed by Joseph Palermo, former regular army officer, as they attempted to hold up Victor Diesing, seventy-one, in his drugstore in downtown St. Louis. Palermo now is a restaurant proprietor.

Will Low, Artist, Dies

New York.—Will H. Low, American artist of the older school, who had been known for forty years for his murals, portraits and ideal groups, and also for his work in stained glass, died in Bronxville after a brief illness.

Dictatorship for Estonia

Tallinn, Estonia.—Constantine Pasts, president of Estonia, obtained the rights of a dictator when the Estonian parliament, with only four dissenting votes, passed a law granting extraordinary powers to Pasts and his cabinet.

Age

The eye of age looks meek into my heart! The voice of age echoes mournfully through it! The hoary head and palsied hand of age plead irresistibly for its sympathies! I venerate old age; and I love not the man who can look without emotion upon the sunset of life, when the dusk of evening begins to gather over the watery eyes and the shadows of twilight grow broader and deeper upon the understanding.—Longfellow.

Youth

Whoever thinks youth the happiest period of life has outgrown youth long enough to have forgotten. There are sad experiences peculiar to maturity; but youth has an exaggerated capacity for pain; it feels with unnecessary keenness; it draws distressing conclusions from insufficient premises; it sees that life is not always just; and decides wrathfully that it is always unjust; hence it finds misanthropes attractive, and is apt to form leagues of friendship with embittered people.—Mrs. Rentoul Esler.

Lesson for December 18

REVIEW: CHRISTIAN STANDARDS OF LIFE

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.—Luke 9:23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Holiday with Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—How God Orders Us to Live.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Following Christ in Everything.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Ideals of the True Christian.

The best method of review for young people and adults will be to discover the principal teaching of each lesson. This teaching may be set forth as a kind of a motto for the life. A good plan will be to make assignments to the members of the class a week in advance. The passages of Scripture are so diversified that a great variety of opinions will doubtless be obtained. The following suggestions are offered:

Lesson for October 2.

The Christian's growth is by means of his devotional life. His understanding and heart-life should be symmetrically developed. Bible study and prayer go hand in hand. The neglect of either means stunted growth.

Lesson for October 9.

The look into the Bethany home is not to see how Jesus behaved therein, but to see the behavior of the members of that home. The most important lesson is that we should sit at Jesus' feet in the days when all is well, that in the time of sickness and death we, like Mary, may know how to act. We should choose that good part which cannot be taken away.

Lesson for October 16.

The child of today will be the home-maker of tomorrow. It is most important that children be trained for God by instruction in God's Word.

Lesson for October 23.

The divine unit of society is the home. The welfare of its members depends upon their being united to serve the Lord. This union includes the father, the mother, and the children.

Lesson for October 30.

The believer is a citizen as well as a Christian. The instructed Christian will be loyal to the state as well as to the church.

Lesson for November 6.

World peace will come, not through conferences, leagues, and understandings, but through the appearing of the Prince of Peace and the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom. Only then will the "Will of God be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Lesson for November 13.

The all-important thing in life is not making a living but a life. Man's thought and effort should be to shape his life for the life which is to come and not to accumulate the things of the earth which must be left behind at death.

Lesson for November 20.

Wealth is from God. The natural resources from which wealth is gained were prepared by God. Even the ability to seize them and transform them into useful commodities is from God. Every believer should regularly and systematically give of his possessions to God.

Lesson for November 27.

Stewardship of life means the recognition that our very being with all its faculties and powers is a gift of God and that our powers were given for a definite purpose and that God will hold us responsible for their use.

Lesson for December 4.

In order to live in peace with members of other races, one must realize that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. In this light, racial supremacy will vanish.

Lesson for December 11.

The Christian's leisure time should be given to hearing the Word of God and to doing good in Christ's name.

His Dying Eyes

"His orderly found him alone and dying. The officer asked the soldier if he thought he could say a prayer. 'That isn't in my line, sir,' said the man; and then, with a sudden thought, he said, 'But I have got a little cross my mother gave me; will that help you, sir?' The officer took the cross, and lifting it before him, murmured, 'Hold Thou thy cross before my dying eyes,' and died."

Blessings

In every duty every happiness, God sends us some sacrifice—some offering is required. If he sends riches, they are weighed with responsibilities; if he sends loving parents, they will need care and gratitude when the trail of old age draws on; if he sends unbroken, unclouded days of happiness, there is the gift of sympathy for others not so blessed.

Personal Service

Many young people are stingy in the giving of personal service, either to the society or to the church. They are willing, perhaps, to do the easy and pleasant things but reluctant to undertake tasks that require time and thought and effort. What Sunday school is not in need of young men for teachers of the boys' classes? To teach such a class demands study and interest in the boys and work in their behalf.

Dessert Recipes
Now in Season

Delectable Tit-Bits That Are at the Command of the Hostess Who Plans Wisely.

WITH the winter season now in full swing and the harvest of nuts over, the smart hostess is quick to take advantage of the new dessert recipes featuring walnuts, pecans and other varieties. Easy to prepare, these dishes form a contrast to the standard sweets and contain all of the freshness of the kernels, whose flavor now is better than at any other time during the year.

Three of the new desserts follow:

NUT BROWN PUFF

½ cup sugar; ¼ teaspoon salt; 1½ cups scalded milk; 2 egg yolks, beaten; ½ cup soda crackers, crumbled; ¼ cup nut meats, chopped; ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring; ¼ teaspoon vanilla; 2 egg whites.

Mix crumbled crackers, sugar, salt and cover with scalded milk. Stir into beaten egg yolks. Add nut meats and flavoring and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into buttered baking dish. Bake in a moderate oven thirty-five to forty minutes.

DATE ROLL

½ cup dates, stoned and cut fine; 8 marshmallows, cut fine; ¾ cup graham crackers, finely crumbled; ½ cup nut meats, broken; 5 tablespoons cream; 1 teaspoon vanilla.

Crumble crackers fine and reserve three tablespoons of cracker crumbs for coating roll. Combine other crumbs with dates, marshmallows and nut meats. Blend with cream, add vanilla and shape into a roll. Coat with cracker crumbs and place in refrigerator three-four hours to set and chill. Serve in slices with added whipped cream. A wonderful ice-box dessert; six portions.

PIRATE BARS

1½ cups graham crackers; ½ teaspoon salt; 1½ teaspoon baking powder; 1½ cups dates; 1 cup chopped nut meats; 3 eggs well beaten; 1 cup brown sugar.

Crumble graham crackers fine and mix with salt and baking powder and add chopped pitted dates and nuts. Beat the eggs and sugar together and combine the two mixtures.

mixing thoroughly. Turn into well-buttered shallow pan. Bake in moderate oven twenty to twenty-five minutes. Cut in bars while warm. Delicious soft cookies; this recipe makes sixteen bars one inch thick. Preparation, eight minutes.

Living Stone-Age Men

Aborigines found by the recent Mackay aerial survey expedition to Central Australia are reported to be as primitive as Stone age men who inhabited Europe 5,000 years ago. Their rites and ceremonials are very crude. The huge headdress worn by warriors during a corroboree, a celebration among the Pinto tribe, consisted of grass and feathers bound with human hair. Natives eat with their fingers a "porridge" composed of ground grass seeds, and fire is made by friction between a wooden shield and a woomeera, used for carrying small articles.

Biggest Map of Moon Made

H. Percy Wilkins of Llanelly, Wales, has just completed the largest map of the moon ever made. It is 200 inches in diameter and shows scores of thousands of craters, ridges, mountains and many details never before shown, all portrayed accurately to scale. Wilkins started the map 14 years ago. He is an interior decorator, and studies astronomy in his spare time.

Then What Happened?

Traffic Officer—"Say, what's your hurry. Where's the fire?" Lady Driver—"In your eyes, you great big gorgeous policeman!"

Expect Coal to Furnish

New Source of Protein

Coal may be proved to be a new source of protein, an essential element in food. Experiments made by German chemists seem to indicate that coal chemistry has already advanced to the point where, by technically practicable processes, it is possible to obtain directly from coal and coke such substances as are used by nature in the synthesis both of the animal and human body. But one cannot at present imagine artificial substance, but surely a definite direction is being marked in this field, and it is shown that the production of albuminous materials from a coal base is ready to be disclosed.

Work in this direction has been prosecuted in the Gesellschaft fur Kohlenteknik for more than a decade, and it is said to have bridged the gap between chemicals and the materials occurring in coal, which falls within the range of protein formation.—Sunday Magazine of the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Free Wheeling

Little Jean's father was a mechanic and he heard much about free wheeling, brakes and the like, but did not quite understand what it was about.

It happened one day that he had to take his baby sister in the perambulator. One of his friends called to him:

"Hey, Jean, are you getting paid for riding your sister around?" Jean, with a disgusted look on his face, answered:

"Naw, this is a free wheeling job."

What makes a baby turn out to be PERFECT?

WILL that precious little one in your arms be a perfect specimen? Handsome? Happy? Healthy? Will he grow up so strong and fine and well that he'll be pointed out as one of Nature's lucky ones?

Of course, there are many things that play their part in shaping his future. Heredity. Pre-natal care. Favorable conditions at birth. But, more and more, physicians are stressing the importance of his early food.

If your own milk fails, what food contains the elements he needs in a form his baby stomach can digest with greatest ease?

Physicians make test with fifty babies. Recently, in a famous clinic, two specialists in infant diet fed a group of 50 average babies on Eagle Brand over a period of months—comparing results with other groups of babies similarly fed on other foods. Eagle Brand was the only food these babies received, except for the usual supplementary foods* now given even with mother's milk. Regularly, X-ray pictures of bones were taken. Tooth development was watched. Weights and heights recorded. Blood counts made. And at last came the verdict: Measured by every scientific test, the result was favorable to Eagle Brand. This simple diet—

Eagle Brand with the usual supplementary foods*—had proved equal to the building of 100% babies!

Send for FREE baby booklet

If you cannot nurse your baby, this test will mean a great deal to you. Try Eagle Brand Milk, following the easy directions on the label, and supplement this nourishing, easily digested milk with the supplementary foods* told of in our FREE booklet, "Baby's Welfare." This booklet—whose 80 pages are filled with guidance in all matters of baby care—has helped many a mother raise a healthy, handsome, happy baby. Mail the coupon for your copy. A report of the physicians' test will be sent your doctor, on request.

*The usual supplementary foods, of course, are orange or tomato juice, and cod liver oil or other source of the anti-rachitic vitamin D.
